Do you like my picture? I took it yesterday at Death Valley in California. The valley is a huge flat desert between steep mountains and sandy hills. I love sunny places, but this place was too hot even for me. According to my travel guide, in 1913, there was a temperature of 57°C – the highest temperature ever recorded! Luckily, it was only 49°C yesterday. (ha ha)

I discovered how this place got its name. In 1849, people tried to cross the valley in order to look for gold. But there wasn't any food or water and one person died. So the area got the name Death Valley. Today, the valley is famous for being hot enough to fry an egg on the ground. I had some eggs in my backpack to test this theory. But I didn't fry them on the ground. I put them in a pan. The eggs started to cook, but they didn't get hard enough to eat. :) The desert is beautiful, but it was great to return to our cool hotel.
